One of the nation’s premier textile scholars discusses more than 500 samplers and embroideries, most never before published. They provide glimpses into the everyday lives of young women, set against the changing backdrop of Maryland history and the state’s rich mix of cultures from Colonial times to the eve of the Civil War.

Some samplers contain registers of family history; others are memorial or mourning samplers. Poems, moral precepts and biblical verses abound. Especially engaging are the samplers with “busy yards,” populated by animals, birds and people. Exquisite silk pictorial embroideries were created under the tutelage of Quaker samplers are distinguished by broad compartmentalized borders filled with pairs of gorgeous flowers, butterflies and birds. Embroidered maps, all worked between 1797 and the early 1800s, form their own recognizable group.

Modern day embroiderers will find inspiration in the designs. Students of women’s history will be fascinated by the role of needlework in early female education. Appendices provide names of all documented schools and teachers. Collectors and antiques dealers have long awaited such a book.
